Portable lighting, such as floor and table lamps, also work well for both ambient and task illumination and can be moved as desired. For task lighting in the kitchen, under-cabinet lighting fixtures work well, and wall-mounted lamps with swinging arms work well for bedroom task lighting, while wall-mounted sconces can provide ambient light all throughout your home. For accent lighting, you will want to consider a fixture that allows you to focus a beam of light directly onto the item you wish to highlight.

Good lighting in any home usually involves the use of a variety of lighting sources that can be adjusted to achieve the mood and light level that you seek at different times, depending upon the activities involved. Proper lighting is as important to your home's interior design as any other element, yet it is often neglected, despite the fact that there are so many options available to solve any problem. Floor cans, swag lamps and a multitude of other lighting fixtures offer a dramatic new look for your home with a relatively small investment.
